The Indian Council of Agricultural Research, the government of India, oversaw the establishment of the ICAR-Central Sheep and Wool Research Institute in 1962. The institute's top aims are to conduct research, provide training, and implement extension programmes to increase sheep output of meat and wool and to create processing technology for sheep products. The institute has established an agribusiness incubation centre, released the avishaan sheep breed, and applied for six patents over the past three years. In terms of wool research, the institute consistently worked to increase the value of the coarse wool. Numerous diverse wool products, such as wool seedling bags, wool reinforced composites, and wool rajai, have been produced during the past three years
